for more information

The Natural Resource Publication series addresses natural resource topics that are of interest and applicability to a broad readership in the National Park Service and to others in the management of natural resources, including the scientific community, the public, and the NPS conservation and environmental constituencies. Manuscripts are peer-reviewed to ensure that the information is scientifically credible, technically accurate, appropriately written for the intended audience, and is designed and published in a professional manner.

[include one of the following two paragraphs, depending on whether it is an NRR or NRTR report]

Natural Resource Reports are the designated medium for disseminating high priority, current natural resource management information with managerial application. The series targets a general, diverse audience, and may contain NPS policy considerations or address sensitive issues of management applicability. Examples of the diverse array of reports published in this series include vital signs monitoring plans; monitoring protocols; "how to" resource management papers; proceedings of resource management workshops or conferences; annual reports of resource programs or divisions of the Natural Resource Program Center; resource action plans; fact sheets; and regularly-published newsletters.

The Natural Resource Technical Reports series is used to disseminate the peer-reviewed results of scientific studies in the physical, biological, and social sciences for both the advancement of science and the achievement of the National Park Service's mission. The reports provide contributors with a forum for displaying comprehensive data that are often deleted from journals because of page limitations. Current examples of such reports include the results of research that addresses natural resource management issues; natural resource inventory and monitoring activities; resource assessment reports; scientific literature reviews; and peer reviewed proceedings of technical workshops, conferences, or symposia.

Views, statements, findings, conclusions, recommendations and data in this report are solely those of the author(s) and do not necessarily reflect views and policies of the U.S. Department of the Interior, National Park Service. Mention of trade names or commercial products does not constitute endorsement or recommendation for use by the National Park Service.

This report is available from ([Your Network or other \[URL\]](#)) and the Natural Resource Publications Management Web site (<http://www.nature.nps.gov/publications/NRPM>) on the Internet.

The above paragraph can be modified to meet your specific needs. You can direct to where available hardcopies can be found or to the TIC office etc. if wanted.

Discussion

With the experience gained from two pilot field seasons (2005 and 2006), our first year of fully implementing the NCCN landbird monitoring program proceeded very smoothly. Our procedures for season preparation, data collection, data management, data analysis, and reporting (Siegel et al. 2007a) have all been well vetted, and were found this year to require no substantial changes. However the sample design of 68 transects plus sampling in one of the small parks was originally intended for implementation with an 8-person crew. Financial constraints forced us to reduce the crew to six people. Through hard work and determination, our 6-person crew was able to nearly complete all of the intended sampling, and were it not for unusually rainy conditions towards the end of the field season, they likely would have done so. In the end they were able to sample 65 of the 68 intended transects, missing three transects on the alternating panel.

Interpreting our survey results at this juncture is premature, as they have not yet been adjusted for differences in survey effort or potential differences in detectability of birds between years, analyses which will take place in conjunction with trend analyses in our first five-year report. Nevertheless, it is striking that the number of birds detected on annual-panel transects in the large parks rose sharply between 2006 and 2007, even as the number of species detected along those transects remained virtually unchanged. While much of the increase in number of birds detected was due to the drastic increase in Pine Siskins, many species were detected in slightly or moderately greater numbers than in 2005 or 2006. With additional years of data (as well as the more nuanced analysis of detectability that will be conducted on the first five years of data) we will gain the capacity to rigorously assess apparent changes like these, and to generate and test hypotheses about their causes.

At SAJH, it is particularly notable that three of the four most frequently detected species, American Goldfinch, Savannah Sparrow, and White-crowned Sparrow, are relatively rare in, if not altogether absent from, the three large parks. This finding underscores the value of including the small parks in the NCCN landbird monitoring program—by doing so we not only extend our inference to the small parks, we also extend it to additional species that would otherwise not be effectively monitored by the program.

We conclude that the NCCN landbird monitoring program is off to an excellent start, with a comprehensive, field-tested protocol, two years of annual-panel data collected during the protocol development phase (2005 and 2006), and now a year of full project implementation, including data collection on the annual panel as well as the first alternating panel.
