

Lorraine Eiler

International Sonoran Desert Alliance

“Well, I think probably the most unique plant that’s out here in the Sonoran Desert are the cacti - the different types of cacti, particularly the saguaro. There are stories about the saguaro that if you’re traveling out there, and walking around and you, and it gets to be a certain time of the day, and you see a saguaro, it’s, it’s amazing how sometimes they resemble human beings and it’s really eerie. They come in all shapes, all sizes, and it takes hundreds and hundreds of years to grow. The seed that they put out is so minute. It’s just a tiny, tiny, tiny seed that you plant and you may not see the cactus grow to your height in your lifetime but maybe your great grandchildren might, might see it grow to their height.”